There was no immediate indication how the children arrived at Livermore and the California Rock Co. quarry.

The FBI had moved into Chowchilla on Friday to help investigate the disappearance after local authorities said they feared it was a carefully planned mass kidnaping.

However, authorities were baffled by lack of contact from any kidnapers and the scarcity of clues.

President Ford ordered the FBI to brief him personally on the investigation and FBI Director Clarence Kelley sent "a substantial number" of agents, hunt dogs and crime experts to Chowchilla.

The Highway Patrol said the school bus was found Thursday night, driven into a dry canal and hidden in a thicket of tall bamboo off state Highway 152, about 130 miles southeast of San Francisco.

After a witness reported seeing a white van preceding the bus shortly before it vanished, the patrol ordered its officers to stop all vans carrying more than two persons.

Madera County Sheriff Ed Bates had said the disappearance seemed to be a precision mass abduction. "We are waiting to be contacted," he told parents and reporters who crowded his command post at the Chowchilla Police Department.

"There's no blood, no evidence of foul play at the bus," Bates said. "I absolutely can't figure it. We can't find anybody who has a motive.

Random articles of clothing were reported found in different directions from the spot where the bus was discovered, but Dymally said at least one of these apparent clues, a knapsack found along a road, was proven to have no connection with the disappearance.

"They could have been put out as decoys, since they were all in different directions," said Norman Hodges, a sheriff's deputy in neighboring Fresno County who was aiding in the search.

Unified School District, Lee Roy Tatom, said whoever took the children "would have to know the area and the conditions. These people had to know what they were doing. This wasn't an amateur job.'

He said one of the girls aboard had an ulcerated stomach and needed large amounts of milk. The child was not identified.

Lincoln Public Schools budget comes up for public scrutiny Monday night.

The 1976-77 budget is 18% higher than the $25,860,010 of the current year.

In order to raise the $4,677,229 the school board is seeking a 6.021-mill increase in property taxes. The mill increase means that taxes on a $30,000 house (actual value) with an assessed value of $10,500 would go from $539.38 to $602.70 per year. That reflects an increase of 11%, on the school's portion of taxes alone.

Teacher salaries, at $24,281,563, are un from $22,655,094 last year as the per pupil cost rises from $806.75 to $861,87. representing what Supt. John Prasch calls the "most important single factor in the budget rise.

Harvests May Hold Off Spectre Of World Food Shortage

ROME (AP) — While severe drought ravages crops and cattle in Western Europe and Australia. bountiful harvests elsewhere should stave off any world food shortage, according to experts here and abroad.

 This may be of little comfort to Europeans, sweltering for weeks and facing the possibility of higher prices for fruits and vegetables.

Or to some of the poorest countries in the Third World which must find the cash to import food to feed their needy or depend on aid from the rich

But specialists at the Rome-based U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization — FAO — citing reports compiled at the end of June, say they are expecting world grain production to rise this year by 7 or 8 per cent above 1975 to about 1.1 billion tons.

Forecasts by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and a survey by The Associated Press indicate favorable harvests, especially in the United States and the Soviet Union.

One casualty of the drought, however, may be attempts to build up reserve food stocks for use in emergencies. Estimated reserves remain below what the FAO considers a safe minimum level, about 17 or 18 per cent of world consumption.

The damage brought by Europe's drought is difficult to measure firmly, subject as it is to daily weather conditions. In the past week it has rained in France and Belgium and experts still hold out hope that significant rainfall will come in time to keep down damage to crops and - more significant in the long run - damage to herds from cattle slaughtered because of the drought.

Pierre Lardinois, commissioner of the nine-nation European Common Market, estimated last week that the community's total grain crop would fall five million tons from last year's 97 million and that shortages of potatoes and other fruit and vegetables would develop.

At the same time, cattle are being driven by heat and lack of fodder to slaughterhouses, creating a temporary glut on the market, although it may take several more months to determine the extent of perGerardo Bildesheim, FAO's regional representative for Europe, said damage to herds could force the Common Market to reconsider its restrictions on imports of South American beef.

In France, a large exporter, the drought may cut the total cereal crop from 25.7 million tons in 1975 to 20 million or 22 million tons this year, according to Philippe Neese, president of the General Association of Wheat Producers. He said it was likely France would export only to its Common Market partners and send nothing to the Third World.

In contrast to Western Europe, the Soviet Union has had an abnormally wet spring and early summer and Soviet agriculture officials are pleased with the reversal after last year's devastating drought. The wet weather so far seems not to have had serious, harmful effects.

Last weekend, the U.S. Department of Agriculture forecast a Soviet grain harvest of 195 million tons this year — a strong recovery from 1975 when the harvest was 139.9 million tons, smallest in a decade.

department's initial forecast of June 27. Most of that increase is thought to be in wheat. The wet weather may have hurt vegetable, potato and sugar beet harvests if there is an early autumn, but there are no predictions yet.

Nor is there any indication that the wet weather has affected Soviet food imports or the traditional exports of bread grains to Eastern Europe.

The United States is enjoying bumper crops. The Agriculture Department forecast last Monday a record com production of 6.55 billion bushels, 14 per cent larger than last year. It also projects wheat production at 2.04 billion bushels, 4 per cent less than last year's record crop but the second largest in Australia, however, is going through one of its worse droughts in history, threatening cattle and the wheat crop, the country's largest export item. Little rain has fallen the past three months in an area equivalent in size to Texas and Oklahoma. Most experts forecast at least a 20 per cent drop in wheat output, to about 9.5 million tons, reducing export earnings by more than $250 million. Thousands of cattle have died of starvation.

But over-all, the FAO at the end of June projected world production of wheat and coarse grains would rise 7 or 8 per cent above last year to about 1.1 billion tons, according to B. P. Dutia, a commodities expert.

FAO officials emphasized this figure did not take into account any recent deterioration in the European and Australian droughts, but Dutia said this would only have a negligible effect on the world out-

Brazil, for example, is projecting its best harvest ever if estimates hold. Agriculture Minister Alysson Paulinelli said Brazil will produce 11 million tons of soybeans, 18.3 million tons of corn and 101 million tons of sugar cane.

FAO officials fear that panic talk over the European drought will produce speculation and shoot up consumer prices. "The danger is speculation based on exaggerated reports of scarcity," said Bildesheim.

Doomsday Vigil Ends In Eviction

GRANNIS, Ark. (AP) - The said they believed the world together in the house until the world did not end Friday. The marshals came instead, armed with an eviction order, ending the nearly 10-month vigil kept by 30 true believers in a brick house on the outskirts of this hamlet. It was not supposed to happen would end before any eviction took place. "We can't help but think it will be the end. We can't believe anything else," spokeswoman Elizabeth Nance Bard said earlier this week.

The vigil began last September when Viola Walker, 67, told her kinfolk of a message from God. The Second Coming was near, she said, meaning the return of God and the end of the world.

And so they gathered, 21 to keep the long wait, others coming and going, all related by blood or marriage, heeding Mrs. Walker's message to remain she said.

The end came Friday when Owen and two deputy marshals drove up in a couple of cars. There were 30 persons in the house and they left, quietly and quickly, causing hardly a ripple in this southwest Arkansas community, population 177

The vigil will continue, said Mrs. Bard, but probably only "in our hearts."

She had said earlier that vigil members did not believe the marshal would evict them. "After what we've been through, we just couldn't consider that,"

"We don't know what we will were repossessed when vigil do," she said Friday after the marshals escorted her out, "but our faith is certainly not shaken.'

The vigil members will move to-three or four homes in the Grannis area, Mrs. Bard said, but had no real plans for continuing their watch. When the vigil began last fall, the keepers took their children from school, quit their jobs, stopped paying their bills and, for a while, refused to tell others what they were doing.

The embassy will stage another evacuation Tuesday and is urging the 1,000 Americans still registered as being in Lebanon to leave. Officials said most of those on the list were born in Lebanon and hold dual citizenship. Many may have already left the country without telling the embassy, they said.

In Washington, President Ford's press secretary, Ron Nessen, said Ford made the decision for a new evacuation after discussions with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, Defense . Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and CIA director George Bush.

The embassy staff, reduced from about 200 at the start of the war 15 months ago to 36 presently, will be further cut to 15 persons.

Embassy officials in Beirut said Seelye would remain, but in Washington, a State Department spokesman said Seelye might be withdrawn because of the deteriorating situation.

Seelye's assignment involved meeting with Lebanese leaders to try to halt the bloodshed. spokesman Robert Funseth said, but the ambassador has not been able to leave the embassy area in Moslem-controlled West Beirut to meet with Christian leaders because of the danger.

Palestinian leader Yasir Arafat canceled a meeting with Syrian President Hafez Assad, accusing the Syrians of violating an agreement to pull back troops from the leftist-held cities of Sofar, 12 miles east of Beirut, and Sidon, 25 miles south of the capital.

The Palestinians and their leftist Moslem allies also accused the Syrians of continuing to shell Tripoli and seize leftist supply routes between Beirut and the northern port.

Arafat and leftist and Moslem leaders were meeting in Beirut on Friday. Their forces are being pushed back by right-wing Lebanese Christian militias and by the Syrians, who are trying to force the Moslems into peace negotiations with the Christians.

Gerardo Bildesheim, FAO's regional representative for Europe, said damage to herds could force the Common Market to reconsider its restrictions on imports of South American beef.

In France, a large exporter, the drought may cut the total cereal crop from 25.7 million tons in 1975 to 20 million or 22 million tons this year, according to Philippe Neese, president of the General Association of Wheat Producers. The embassy will stage another evacuation Tuesday and is urging the 1,000 Americans still registered as being in Lebanon to leave. Officials said most of those on the list were born in Lebanon and hold dual citizenship. Many may have already left the country without telling the embassy, they said.

In Washington, President Ford's press secretary, Ron Nessen, said Ford made the decision for a new evacuation after discussions with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and CIA director George Bush.

The embassy staff, reduced from about 200 at the start of the war 15 months ago to 36 presently, will be further cut to 15 persons.

Nebraska Penal Complex doctors say they have made strides in medical treatment and facilities the past two years, but they view the progress as the first leg of a marathon run.

"I put the pen in the hole $280,000 the first year I was here," said Dr. Kenneth Reighter, head of the medical facilities.

Reighter and Dr. William Marsh, penal complex psychiatrist, said the budget for medical matters has gone up while facility space and staff have about tripled over the past two years.

They laid their views out for the Associated Press in reply to a dozen proposals from a prisoners' Jaycee organization to upgrade the medical facilities and treatment.

Dr. Reighter said several of the proposals of the 1-11 Jaycees were already being followed, and the ones that weren't require either more money, equipment, space or staff, which he would like to have.

The staff has grown from seven to 21 since Reighter came to the prison.

The original facility has been expanded, with a seven-bed dormitory, a psychiatry center and a clinic added.

Reighter said he needs another doctor, at least half a dozen more nurses with a dozen preferred, another pharmacist and more physicians' assistants. Dr. Marsh, who actually is only designated as penal psychiatrist on a threefifths time basis, said he needs a psychiatric colleague, clinical psychologists, "psych" social workers, assistants or male nurses. Marsh is slated to go full-time soon.

Despite expansion, space is at a premium. Reighter sometimes keeps medical patients three to a cell in his fivecell area.

They identified psychiatric problems among the regular prison population as a major problem.

"To further verify that psych facility estimate," Marsh said, "50 to 60% of all new commitments admit to prior psychiatric care — one or more times.

The penal complex medical budget for fiscal 1975-76 was about $500,000 and this fiscal year it is up to $625,000, the doctors said.

Washington (UPI) - Congress is favoring big business over small business, even though the latter would provide more jobs, Rep. Charles Thone, R-Neb. said Friday.

He said a recent four-year study showed while big business decreased employment 9% with a 60% increase in sales, small business increased employment 52% with only an 18% increase

"Nevertheless, Congress continues tax laws that favor huge corporations over the family shop," Thone said. "And Congress continues to put the same weight of regulation requiring lawyers and accountants — on small business as on large."

He said he is sponsering legislation to help remedy the situation. The bill calls for tough antimonopoly laws, exclusion of small business from much federal regulation and increasing the federal estate tax from $60,- entering the summer and fulltime job markets. The statewide unemployment rate in May was 4.5%, with 31,-

600 persons out of work. In Lincoln, the jobless rate rose from 3.5% in May (3,500 of 100,090) to 4.5% in June, when 4,450 weren't working among 98,700 persons in the total force. The 4.5% June rate compares with 4.2% in June a year ago. Les Johnston of the Labor Department said, "Probably the Goodyear strike had something to do with it," as those employes taking other jobs likely added to the difficulty of others seeking employment.

In Omaha, 22,450 of 261,350 were unemployed in June, or 8.67%. That rose from 7.1% in May, when the total labor force: was 251,850 persons with 17,950 of them unemployed.

95.5% Employed Johnston said Omaha unemployment is "out of kilter a little," since the rate exceeded normal seasonal movement. He attributed that to no housing or major construction jobs, some layoffs among major employers and in the beef industry.

The Southeast Community College Foundation has voted to accept the Pershing College campus in Beatrice from the University of Nebraska Foundation for about $60,000.

That sum represents the maintenance cost to the NU Foundation during the two years it has held the property.

Douglas Curry, attorney for the college board and a Southeast Foundation board member, said the Beatrice site could begin operating a limited adult education satellite of the Fairbury campus by September. The SeTech board has authorized spending up to $150,-000 for operating costs.

The college foundation, in a meeting earlier this week, was authorized to borrow the money necessary to reimburse the NÜ Foundation. The loan will be secured by a first mortgage on the Beatrice campus. The university foundation board had approved a mechanism for the transfer earlier.

entering the summer and fulltime job markets. The statewide unemployment rate in May was 4.5%, with 31,-600 persons out of work.

In Lincoln, the jobless rate rose from 3.5% in May (3,500 of 100,000) to 4.5% in June, when 4,450 weren't working among 98,700 persons in the total force. The 4.5% June rate compares with 4.2% in June a year ago. Les Johnston of the Labor Department said, "Probably the Goodyear strike had something to do with it," as those employes taking other jobs likely added to the difficulty of others seeking employment.

Further, Johnston cited no large construction projects now underway in Lincoln. In Omaha, 22,450 of 261,350 were unemployed in June, or 8.67%. That rose from 7.1% in May, when the total labor force was 251,850 persons with 17,950 of them unemployed.

95.5% Employed Johnston said Omaha unemployment is "out of kilter a little," since the rate exceeded normal seasonal movement. He attributed that to no housing or major construction jobs, some layoffs among major employers and in the beef industry.

SeTech To Take Pershing Campus The Southeast Foundation has board was rejected by the 1976 take three to six weeks, he said,

By The Associated Press The Southeast Community College Foundation has voted to accept the Pershing College campus in Beatrice from the University of Nebraska Foundation for about $60,000. That sum represents the maintenance cost to the NU Foundation during the two years it has held the property.

Douglas Curry, attorney for the college board and a Southeast Foundation board member, said the Beatrice site could begin operating a limited adult education satellite of the Fairbury campus by September. The SeTech board has authorized spending up to $150,-000 for operating costs.

The college foundation, in a meeting earlier this week, was authorized to borrow the money necessary to reimburse the NU Foundation. The loan will be secured by a first mortgage on the Beatrice campus. The university foundation board had approved a mechanism for the transfer earlier.

The action will not affect Southeast Foundation scholarship funds in the Lowell Welsh Fund, Curry said in a prepared statement. The Southeast Foundation board, composed chiefly of the college's board members or top staff, voted to award scholarships in Welsh's name to Milford campus students. It began a $60,000 fund drive last November.

Legislature.

Curry said the Southeast Foundation move is not an attempt to circumvent requirements for a public hearing. Use of the foundation allows the college to spread out the cost, he said, or to "walk away from it and sell the 70 acres off for farm ground" if Pershing operation later proves unwise.

NU Foundation trustees will vote by proxy on the transfer, licensed practical nurse program curry said. The process could probably will move to Beatrice.

The SeTech board will meet Tuesday to approve a 1976-77 budget

At its last meeting, the board said it wants to have limited business and vocational programs at Pershing as soon as possible. They will be administered through Fairbury with limited staff drawn from all three campuses. The Fairbury licensed practical nurse program

Farm Editor Rain delayed the cutting of wheat in northwestern Nebraska again Friday, but most areas saw some cutting Friday after-

The rain also was credited with "giving the soybeans, corn and grain sorghum a new lease on life," by Paul Sindt, state executive director of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

"The state's crops never looked better, but we are right on the ragged edge of drought," Sindt said.

"Irrigated crops all have the pumps running which is producing some concern over fuel supplies, but we have still to have a request for aid in getting fuel for anyone,' he added.

Sindt cited Knox County as one area where crops were stressed by dry weather, but recent rains gave some relief.

critical period for the next 30 days as soybeans, sorghum and corn all are pollinating," he said, "Some corn varieties only pollinate for two or three days. If it is above 100 degrees you can get mostly cobs.

in the morning, but by evening it's all curled up. Soybeans seem to be holding well, but we may not have a third cutting of alfalfa," he said. "The supply of subsoil moisture seems to be largely exhausted. "The irrigation potential is so great that

"There isn't much grain in South Dakota. Some will try to cross that state to North Dakota where the harvest is just starting and a few will go to Montana," said Don Christensen of the Labor Department.

Showers halted cutting at Alliance Friday, but cutters were working at Hemingford Friday afternoon. Yields reached 30 to 40 bushels with test weights from 59 to 62 pounds.

More than half of Banner County is cut out with harvesting now concentrated in the southern part of the county.

Yields have been running 30 to 35 bushels with 60 pound test weight in the

Precipitation Lowest In

By United Press International Precipitation totals during June ranked among the lowest during the past 46 years in many parts of the state and all areas received less than normal amounts of moisture.

That report, which probably issued Friday by the Conservation and Survey Division at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

the division found the north central division had its second driest June this year while the northeast and east central had their third driest.

Other rankings: Panhandle, didn't suprise anyone, was 10th driest, central 8th, south central 7th, southeast 5th and southwest 11th:

It was the second driest June

He said the first apartments or houses could be rented under the new subsidy program in the next

Bolte Death Ruling Likely Next Week

Seward (AP) - Seward County Attorney Curtis Evans says it will be sometime next week before he will be able to make a ruling in the death of Mrs. Stanley (Lauren) Bolte, 19, of Milford who was found dead in the bedroom of her home Tuesday. Evans said he is probing the possibility that the shooting was accidental or suicidal, but added that foul play has not been completely ruled out.

CB Thefts Blamed For Crime Hike

Omaha (AP) — Major crime reported to Omaha police the first six months of this year is up two per cent over the same period one year ago, and citizens band radio thefts are being blamed. Because of those thefts, Omaha's theft category of crime was up 15% the first half of this year. The only other category to show a rise was rape, up one per cent through June compared to the first six months of 1975.

Rain delayed the cutting of wheat in northwestern Nebraska again Friday, but most areas saw some cutting Friday after-

The rain also was credited with "giving the soybeans, corn and grain sorghum a new lease on life," by Paul Sindt, state executive director of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

"The state's crops never looked better, but we are right on the ragged edge of drought," Sindt said.

"Irrigated crops all have the pumps running which is producing some concern over fuel supplies, but we have still to have a request for aid in getting fuel for anyone,'

Sindt cited Knox County as one area where crops were stressed by dry weather, but recent rains gave some relief.

"The cool weather really helps. This is a critical period for the next 30 days as soybeans, sorghum and corn all are pollinating," he said. "Some corn varieties only pollinate for two or three days. If it is above 100 degrees you can get mostly cobs. "The sorghum looks like a million dollars in the morning, but by evening it's all curled up. Soybeans seem to be holding well, but we may not have a third cutting of alfalfa," he said. "The supply of subsoil moisture seems to be largely exhausted.

"The irrigation potential is so great that if we get some cool weather and some good rains, we still can greatly exceed last year's grain production, but it must rain. Last year we lost most of the corn in the 10 dryland counties with heat and drought," he said.

The state Department of Labor noted that there are many custom combine operators who are going home as the

"There isn't much grain in South Dakota. Some will try to cross that state to North Dakota where the harvest is just starting and a few will go to Montana," said Don Christensen of the Labor Department.

Showers halted cutting at Alliance Friday, but cutters were working at Hemingford Friday afternoon. Yields reached 30 to 40 bushels with test weights from 59 to 62 pounds.

More than half of Banner County is cut out with harvesting now concentrated in the southern part of the county.

Yields have been running 30 to 35 bushels with 60 pound test weight in the

A report on the harvest in Montana indicates they may have a record wheat crop. Cutting there is expected to begin around August 1.

The division said only about a third of the normal June rain was received in the north central and eastern areas and about 50-60% of normal elsewhere in the Conditions across the state do not yet fully reflect the extreme dryness, the division said, noting that because of the spotty nature of the rain that fell, some localities received no rain and are experiencing trouble.

The generous amounts of April moisture combined with the timeliness of showers since then have kept conditions from deteriorating as much as might be expected, the division said.

Pilot, Passenger Escape Serious Injury

McCook (UPI) - Two McCook area residents Thursday escaped serious injury in an airplane crash at the McCook Airport. Michael Manker, 28, was piloting a Cessna 172 when it crashed 75 feet short of the runway and struck an embankment, causing the nose wheel to sheer off. Manker and a passenger, Rita Schliz, 22, were taken by ambulance to the McCook Community Hospital and were released after treatment for minor cuts and bruises.

The LES Dilemma

last electric bill? What's that? You thought it was terrible? Well, maybe you would like cil has already denied LES participation in electric rates reduced. You think that hits the nail on the head, huh?

Well, the City Council thinks maybe something should be done about rates, too. But our guess is that the people of Lincoln, given a knowledgable choice, would take the higher rates.

One suggestion for lower rates is for the Lincoln Electric System (LES) to abandon its program of underground power-line installations where feasible. Quite frankly, we believe underground installations are well worth the investment and ought to be continued. Overhead power lines are nothing more than ugly nuisances, in our opinion.

Another suggestion is to abandon currently upgraded standards for streetlighting. But here again, we have a program of beautification and service that we very much doubt the people of Lincoln want to surrender, even for a little change off their light bills.

Also, the City Council is looking closely at a $23.4 million item in the LES budget this coming year for participation in a new coal-burning power plant in Wyoming. This issue, for many reasons, is not as simple as underground lighting or street-lighting but to a bread-and-water electric diet.

Mr. Home-Owner, did you like your it can be said that Lincoln does not want to suffer a power shortage and the City Couna nuclear generating plant, here in Nebraska.

If the Council cuts LES off from both its planned future power supplies, you wonder where the juice to run our homes and businesses is going to come from. You might argue a little with LES future power need predictions but it would be totally irresponsible to assume the utility was 100% wrong.

Our heart is certainly with the Council in taking a close and critical look not only at LES, but at all city budgets. We have the gut feeling, however, that the basic problem in the electric and other energy fields is a result of past management mis-

That means some discomfort now we would prefer not to have but not something about which much can now be done. And there still is the salve found in the fact that Lincoln's electric rates remain lower today than those of most cities in the U.S.

We would urge that the Council not be hasty with LES, that it not force steps be taken that would later be regretted. We don't think the people want to be reduced

Douglas On Right Path

A lawsuit to determine the constitutionality of the 1976 Legislature's malpractice law has now been filed, which puts the matter directly before the courts, and that's where it belongs.

Some of the senators involved seemed surprised when Attorney General Paul Douglas held the law was questionable constitutionally and advised the state insurance director not to implement it. But the procedure Douglas used is not unprecedented — it is the kind of stand taken once before by him, Douglas told the senators, and certainly it is a procedure that his predecessors have used.

If the Legislature believes a law is in the best interest of the state, that Legislature owes it to the people of the state to pass it even though there are constitutional questions that are unanswered. If the Legislature doesn't pass such a law, the constitutional question cannot get to the courts for a decision.

But then it is appropriate for the attorney general to advise the department head whether to implement the statute. If he advises implementation and someone later sues the department head alleging unconstitutionality, the attorney general then defends his position in the courts. If he advises against implementation of the law and someone sues to get it implemented he must defend the position he took against the law. Either way, the question of constitutionality ends in the courts, where it

Douglas had a choice; that there is a constitutional question is clear as a bell and the attorney general was bound to end up in court so he chose which side he wanted to argue.

If for no other reason, perhaps Douglas should be praised for coming down on the "public" side of this question. For, rightly or wrongly, it is the public's right to sue doctors and get large judgments which are limited by the law. It is the kind of situation in which it is difficult for the "public" side of the question to be presented to the courts unless the attorney general takes that side. And those who stand to benefit from the law are well represented by capable attorneys; perhaps it is right that they should initiate the court action.

And another ultimate step is possible. Should the courts decide the law is unconstitutional, either citizens or the Legislature can start the procedure to amend the constitution to make it constitutional. And both routes have been taken in the past.

CHARLES B.SEIB

New Hope For Press

vacation. A month ago I was the dour purveyor of gram tidings: The press, partly because of its own excesses and partly because of the lack of a firm national commitment to the concept of press freedom, was in trouble. The public was fed up with what it saw as a destructive bent in the press. And judges and others in the power structure were taking advantage of this to undermine the First Amendment.

Today I bear happier tidings: The press, for all its failings and despite very real threats to its freedom, is not beyond hope. Its health is basically good and I see signs of a growing

Such is the therapeutic effect of a period in which time was measured by the rise and fall of the tides and my news diet was dominated by the preparations for the bicentennial Fourth being made in several small Maine communities, and their glorious consummation.

As you can see, my optimism is based on something other than hard evidence. It reflects in part a sense of a growing awareness on the part of the press, print and broadcast, of its own shortcomings. It probably also reflects in part a sense of national good feeling; our 200th birthday party, despite efforts of some to cheapen and degrade it, turned out to be a grand affair.

What has the national mood got to do with the performance of the press? The press not only contributes to the temper of the country; it also reacts to it.

Of late, the reaction has taken the form of an oppressive negativism that has alienated readers and viewers and diluted the service the press is supposed to provide in a democracy.

I have a feeling that we are beginning to see an abandomnent of that negativism as part of a beneficial maturing of the media.

To be specific. I think that in the upcoming presidential campaign the American people are going to get what they need and expect from the press, the meaningful, serious news coverage that will permit them to make an informed choice When we add up the score after Nov. 2 we will find that the performance of the media was better than it was in 1972 and better than it has been in this year's pre-nomination politicking

These thoughts are prompted partly by "The Unseeing Eye," a new study of television coverage of the 1972 presidential campaign. It is a devastating job by two syracuse University political science professors, Thomas E. Patterson and Robert D. McCkure They snalyzed news broadcast during that campaign and did extensive interviewing of TV viewers. They

WASHINGTON - There's nothing like a came up with two main findings: Despite conventional wisdom to the contrary, television campaign reporting had no influence on the election outcome. More important, television failed utterly to meet its responsibility to give the electorate the information it had a right to

> TV news was obsessed, they found, with campaign trivia that would produce "good pictures" - the candidates consorting with crowds at rallies and airports, for example. The borserace aspects of the campaign were stressed, while the qualifications of the candidates and their positions on national issues were woefully

☆ ☆ ☆ There is no doubt that television, and to a lesser extent newspapers and news magazines, do tend to concentrate on the horse-race. That was clearly the case in the coverage of the recent primaries. For television particularly, the crowds and the hoopla, contrived and otherwise, have been given priority over more serious but less photogenic matters like issues and qualifications

But I sense a growing awareness in the news business that a rebalancing is needed. In the case of television, I think that awareness will be heightened by the Patterson-McClure findings. As for the print press, I am encouraged by a certain self-consciousness about the superficialities and inadequacies of traditional political coverage, even though we are not quite ready to relinquish them.

It may be a reflection of post-vacation emphoria, but I can even take heart from the fact that, as I write this, the front page of the newspaper at my side gives precedence to an issue story — "Carter Promises Job Aid for Ottles" - over a horse-race story - "Mondale, Muskie and Glean Called Finalists for No. 2

I have no illusions that there won't be a lot of horse-race reporting during the coming campaign After all, there is a lot of good, healthy sport in a national political contest. And old habits are hard to break.

But I think we will see in the coming crucial months a down-playing of some of the old geewhiz superficialities and a growing recognition that the public expects and deserves more from the media. I think that by election day, every voter who cares will have been given the information he or she needs to make a decision.

As I said. I have no hard evidence to support these predictions. Undoubtedly I will find. very soon, reasons to recision my credentials as a critic of the press.

NEW YORK - Despite his being the front-runner during the final hours leading up Jimmy Carter's uncovering of the very well kept secret, delegates generally were initially underwhelmed by the announcement that it indeed would be Fritz Mondale.

Mondale was the media favorite and Carter's favorite, but the delegates were clearly divided over their first choice for vice presidential nominee.

Mondale is well liked by some elements of the Democratic Party which have been apprehensive of Carter, although others with similar doubts had an alternative choice in mind for second spot on the ticket.

But if the immediate reaction to Mondale from many Democratic delegates was a somewhat resigned "so what?" as was the case with some Nebraskans here, an almost universal agreement that the Minnesota senator is a strong candidate came with a second given a great deal of credit for not yielding to party establishment pressure to tap a Catholic to balance Carter's evangelical Protestanism or a northeastern ethnic to keep the urban bluecollar people happy.

Carter, it is widely perceived, would make the best president in the event of his own incapacity and a running-mate who in addition would give political strength to the ticket in the election ahead.

Nebraska Democrats, many of whom were pledged to Frank Church for president and who favored the nomination of the Idaho senator for second place on the ticket, concede that Mondale was an excellent choice who gives the Democrats a good chance to win Nebraska in November, especially if President Ford wins his party's nomination.

Several Nebraskans said they. would have worked for Mondale had his presidential campaign not self-aborted in 1974.

They think he as a midwesterner gives Carter added strength in farm states where there is rural dissatisfaction with Ford's treatment of the agricultural sector.

There was a strong feeling of optimism as delegates left New York that the Carter-Mondale ticket not only would sweep the Democrats back into the White House, but would help Democratic congressional candidates across the board.

☆ ☆ ☆ One of those voicing optimism in New York this week was Charles McBride, executive director of the Democratic Senate Campaign Committee

Carter, as a matter of fact, is It's his job to help Democratic incumbents and challengers refine their political art, and the committee is also able under law to contribute up to $17,500 to an individual candidate's campaign. A drop in the bucket, but significant in how and to whom it is distributed. McBride and his Democratic House Campaign Committee attended the convention to handle credentials and seating for congressmen and to raise money.

Because the "specter of Carter is running so well, we think we're in good shape everywhere in the country." McBride said.

Huge increases in the lopsided margins Democrats now enjoy in both houses of Congress are not expected. McBride admitted to Democratic concern about the chances of four incumbents in particular: Vance Hartke of Indiana, Joseph Montoya of New Mexico, John Tunney of California and Frank Moss of Utah.

Those four "may be in trouble," he said.

But McBride said Democrats aren't prepared to give up on those incumbents, nor are they writing off any of the contests for four vacant Democratic seats and four vacant Republican seats, including the Senate seat Roman Hruska of Nebraska will

Senate nominee Ed Zorinsky, McBride said: "We're going to give him more than our blessings. We'll take a very active interest in the race. I think he'll be a very aggressive can-

The fact that Zorinsky has a very strong Omaha base will help him, McBride said, adding. "He's got a lot of work to do, but it can be done."

McBride believes that the showing by Nebraska Democratic candidates in the last two Senate elections proves that Zorinsky could pull an up-set, despite John Y. McCollister's apparent early

"A Democratic governor and the expectation that Carter will run well out there" give Zorinsky an added boost, McBride believes He likens the Nebraska contest to Connecticut Secretary of State Gloria Shaffer's challenge to Republican Sen. Lowell Weicker: "It's an uphill battle, but the Democrat has a good chance to win."

Their mood was consistently upbeat. Most of the people were pleasant and grumbles about poor service or the legendary surliness of Manhattanites were held to a minimum, as were reported incidents of delegate-which McBride is.

But it is representative of the optimism which pervaded the convention here. And it must be admitted that the optimism is hospitality which I remarked about at the beginning of the convention held up until the end.

New Yorkers surprised even not entirely unfounded. The startling New York themselves.

Much credit must be given the people who run this city for instilling some sort of civic pride and desire to be of service which transcended the city's troubles. And New York's police department was another reason the convention was absorbed into the life of New York as smoothly as a political convention can be absorbed. It is a magnificent department, surely one of the best in the world. New York policemen treat people like people.

New York City is a feast which cannot be eaten all at once. It has to be taken a nibble at a time, with many a visit to the table to appreciate it.

This trip, from the third base seat at Yankee Stadium to the roast wild boar dinner at Maxwell's Plum to visiting St. Patrick's to lengthy crosstown walks was an immensely enjoyable personal experience.

The Democrats must have found it similarly satisfying. Another 52-year lapse between conventions seems out of the

TOM WICKER

Looking Back

NEW YORK - Not long before Ohio cinched the Democratic presidential nomination for Jimmy Carter, a large black man stood up in the North Carolina delegation and held up a hand-painted sign that read: "Robeson County for Carter.

That wasn't funny, unlike another home-made sign above the Virginia delegation that proclaimed: "Teeth Are In." But to an onlooker who was a young reporter on the Lumberton Robesonian in Robeson County, N.C., in 1949, the North Carolina declaration had considerably more significance.

Enough has been written about the meaning of a southern white man's being nominated by the Democrats, but the placard in those hands may justify recalling here that in 1940 not only could no such nomination have been made (in 1952, the party crushed the hopes of another Georgian, Richard B. Russell), but there would have been no black delegates from North Carolina - certainly not from Robeson County.

In these days, race relations in the county were so stratified that in the Lumberton movie theaters, there were three separate but by no means equal senting sections-whites on the main floor, blacks on one side of the balcony and the Lumbee Indians on the other side, with a chicken wire fence

Carter's vice-presidential nominee clearly appeared to have become the popular choice by the time his name was made public - not only in press speculation but in the cocktail party chatter and the gossip and note-swapping among delegates and alternates on the convention floor.

The reasons seemed primarily to be Walter Mondale's youth - 48 - relatively fresh face and liberal voting record. His selection was seen as complementing Carter's own age - 51 and restoring to the ticket some of the freshness inevitably lost in the long Carter primary campaign. More important, perhaps, in choosing Mondale, the presidential nominee obviously reached out to the liberal wing of the party which has not as yet given Carter its beart.

Recognizing all the things that could slip twixt cup and lip, it's not too far-fetched to assume that if Carter is elected and serves eight years, Mondale - who would be only 56 - might by then have been able to build sufficient support to win the presidential nomination in 1964. Richard Nixon did just that between 1952 and 1960; so did Hubert Humphrey between 1964 and 1968; and so probably would have Spiro T. Agnew, had he not been forced to resign under a cloud.

On the second night of the convention, the Democrats voted down dissent by almost three to one, and that tells as much as anything about the difference in the party since it last nominated a presidential candidate at Miami Beach in 1972.

Then, everything under the sun was debuted and voted upon, and so many vice presidential candidates were put in nomination that their nominating and seconding erations pushed the acceptance speech of George McGovern back to 3:30 in the marning. Politically, the convention was a dinaster; but few delegates could say they didn't get a chance to be beard.

This time, the Democrats voted down the merest discussion of the platform. It's true that the minority report they overwhelmingly disapproved didn't provide for any voting; and it's also true that in the 20 minutes of debate it would have allowed on each disputed subject — say, abortion — not much could usefully have been said; so that the insue was mostly emp-last electric bill? What's that? You thought it was terrible? Well, maybe you would like electric rates reduced. You think that hits the nail on the head, huh?

Well, the City Council thinks maybe something should be done about rates, too. But our guess is that the people of Lincoln, given a knowledgable choice, would take the higher rates.

One suggestion for lower rates is for the Lincoln Electric System (LES) to abandon its program of underground power-line installations where feasible. Quite frankly, we believe underground installations are well worth the investment and ought to be continued. Overhead power lines are nothing more than ugly nuisances, in our

Another suggestion is to abandon currently upgraded standards for streetlighting. But here again, we have a program of beautification and service that we very much doubt the people of Lincoln want to surrender, even for a little change off their light bills.

Also, the City Council is looking closely at a $23.4 million item in the LES budget this coming year for participation in a new coal-burning power plant in Wyoming. This issue, for many reasons, is not as simple as underground lighting or street-lighting but

Mr. Home-Owner, did you like your it can be said that Lincoln does not want to suffer a power shortage and the City Council has already denied LES participation in nuclear generating plant here in

Our heart is certainly with the Council in taking a close and critical look not only at LES, but at all city budgets. We have the gut feeling, however, that the basic problem in the electric and other energy fields is a result of past management mis-

That means some discomfort now we would prefer not to have but not something about which much can now be done. And there still is the salve found in the fact that Lincoln's electric rates remain lower today than those of most cities in the U.S.

We would urge that the Council not be hasty with LES, that it not force steps be taken that would later be regretted. We don't think the people want to be reduced to a bread-and-water electric diet.

Douglas On Right Path

stitutionality of the 1976 Legislature's malpractice law has now been filed, which puts the matter directly before the courts, and that's where it belongs.

Some of the senators involved seemed surprised when Attorney General Paul Douglas held the law was questionable constitutionally and advised the state insurance director not to implement it. But the procedure Douglas used is not unprecedented - it is the kind of stand taken once before by him, Douglas told the senators, and certainly it is a procedure that his predecessors have used.

If the Legislature believes a law is in the best interest of the state, that Legislature owes it to the people of the state to pass it even though there are constitutional questions that are unanswered. If the Legislature doesn't pass such a law, the constitutional question cannot get to the courts for a decision.

But then it is appropriate for the attorney general to advise the department head whether to implement the statute. If he advises implementation and someone later sues the department head alleging unconstitutionality, the attorney general then defends his position in the courts. If he advises against implementation of the law

A lawsuit to determine the con- and someone sues to get it implemented he must defend the position he took against the law. Either way, the question of constitutionality ends in the courts, where it

> Douglas had a choice; that there is a constitutional question is clear as a bell and the attorney general was bound to end up in court so he chose which side he wanted

If for no other reason, perhaps Douglas should be praised for coming down on the "public" side of this question. For, rightly or wrongly, it is the public's right to sue doctors and get large judgments which are limited by the law. It is the kind of situation in which it is difficult for the "public" side of the question to be presented to the courts unless the attorney general takes that side. And those who stand to benefit from the law are well represented by capable attorneys; perhaps it is right that they should initiate the court action.

And another ultimate step is possible. Should the courts decide the law is unconstitutional, either citizens or the Legislature can start the procedure to amend the constitution to make it constitutional. And both routes have been taken in the past.

vacation.

A month ago I was the dour purveyor of grim tidings: The press, partly because of its own excesses and partly because of the lack of a firm national commitment to the concept of press freedom, was in trouble. The public was fed up with what it saw as a destructive bent in the press. And judges and others in the power structure were taking advantage of this to undermine the First Amendment

Today I bear happier tidings: The press, for all its failings and despite very real threats to its freedom, is not beyond hope. Its health is basically good and I see signs of a growing

Such is the therapeutic effect of a period in which time was measured by the rise and fall of the tides and my news diet was dominated by the preparations for the bicentennial Fourth being made in several small Maine communities, and their glorious consummation.

As you can see, my optimism is based on something other than hard evidence. It reflects in part a sense of a growing awareness on the part of the press, print and broadcast, of its own shortcomings. It probably also reflects in part a sense of national good feeling; our 200th birthday party, despite efforts of some to cheapen and degrade it, turned out to be a grand affair.

What has the national mood got to do with the performance of the press? The press not only contributes to the temper of the country; it also reacts to it.

Of late, the reaction has taken the form of an oppressive negativism that has alienated readers and viewers and diluted the service the press is supposed to provide in a democracy. I have a feeling that we are beginning to see an abandonment of that negativism as part of a beneficial maturing of the media.

To be specific, I think that in the upcoming presidential campaign the American people are going to get what they need and expect from the press: the meaningful, serious news coverage that will permit them to make an informed choice. When we add up the score after Nov. 2 we will find that the performance of the media was better than it was in 1972 and better than it has been in this year's pre-nomination politicking.

These thoughts are prompted partly by "The Unseeing Eye," a new study of television coverage of the 1972 presidential campaign. It is a devastating job by two Syracuse University political science professors, Thomas E. Patterson and Robert D. McClure. They analyzed news broadcast during that campaign and did extensive interviewing of TV viewers. They

WASHINGTON - There's nothing like a came up with two main findings: Despite conventional wisdom to the contrary, television campaign reporting had no influence on the election outcome. More important, television failed utterly to meet its responsibility to give the electorate the information it had a right to

The horserace aspects of the campaign were stressed, while the qualifications of the candidates and their positions on national issues were woefully

> > 4 4 4

There is no doubt that television, and to a lesser extent newspapers and news magazines, do tend to concentrate on the horse-race. That was clearly the case in the coverage of the recent primaries. For television particularly, the crowds and the hoopla, contrived and otherwise, have been given priority over more serious but less photogenic matters like issues and qualifications.

But I sense a growing awareness in the news business that a rebalancing is needed. In the case of television, I think that awareness will be heightened by the Patterson-McClure findings. As for the print press, I am encouraged by a certain self-consciousness about the superficialities and inadequacies of traditional political coverage, even though we are not quite ready to relinquish them.

It may be a reflection of post-vacation euphoria, but I can even take heart from the fact that, as I write this, the front page of the newspaper at my side gives precedence to an issue story - "Carter Promises Job Aid for Cities" - over a horse-race story - "Mondale Muskie and Glenn Called Finalists for No. 2

公 公 公

I have no illusions that there won't be a lot of horse-race reporting during the coming campaign. After all, there is a lot of good, healthy sport in a national political contest. And old habits are hard to break. But I think we will see in the coming crucial months a down-playing of some of the old geewhiz superficialities and a growing recognition that the public expects and deserves more from the media. I think that by election day, every voter who cares will have been given the information he or she needs to make a decision.

As I said, I have no hard evidence to support these predictions. Undoubtedly I will find, very soon, reasons to reclaim my credentials as a critic of the press.

Nebraskans Approve Selection Of Mondale

By BOB SCHREPF

Star Editorial Writer NEW YORK - Despite his being the front-runner during the final hours leading up Jimmy Carter's uncovering of the very well kept secret, delegates generally were initially un-derwhelmed by the announcement that it indeed would be Fritz Mondale.

Mondale was the media favorite and Carter's favorite, but the delegates were clearly divided over their first choice for vice presidential nominee.

Mondale is well liked by some elements of the Democratic Party which have been apprehensive of Carter, although others with similar doubts had an alternative choice in mind for second spot on the ticket.

But if the immediate reaction to Mondale from many Democratic delegates was a somewhat resigned "so what?" as was the case with some Nebraskans here, an almost universal agreement that the Minnesota senator is a strong candidate came with a second

Mondale is seen as an excellent, hard-working senator who is strong where Carter may be weak - with labor, the liberals, perhaps in the western states and the northern belt of states - an attractive political personality but one who was not such an obvious "balance"

Carter, as a matter of fact, is given a great deal of credit for not yielding to party establishment pressure to tap a Catholic to balance Carter's evangelical Protestanism or a northeastern ethnic to keep the urban bluecollar people happy. Carter, it is widely perceived, chose instead the person he felt staff and counterparts on the

would make the best president in the event of his own incapacity and a running-mate who in addition would give political strength to the ticket in the election ahead.

Nebraska Democrats, many of whom were pledged to Frank Church for president and who favored the nomination of the Idaho senator for second place on the ticket, concede that Mondale was an excellent choice who gives the Democrats a good chance to win Nebraska in November, especially if President Ford wins his party's nomination.

Several Nebraskans said they. would have worked for Mondale had his presidential campaign not self-aborted in 1974.

They think he as a midwesterner gives Carter added strength in farm states where there is rural dissatisfaction with Ford's treatment of the agricultural sector.

There was a strong feeling of optimism as delegates left New York that the Carter-Mondale ticket not only would sweep the Democrats back into the White House, but would help Democratic congressional candidates across the board.

公 公 公 One of those voicing optimism in New York this week was Charles McBride, executive director of the Democratic Senate Campaign Committee.

It's his job to help Democratic incumbents and challengers refine their political art, and the committee is also able under law to contribute up to $17,500 to an individual candidate's campaign. A drop in the bucket, but significant in how and to whom it is distributed. McBride and his

Democratic House Campaign Committee attended the convention to handle credentials and seating for congressmen and to

Because the "specter of Carter is running so well, we think we're in good shape everywhere in the country," McBride said.

Huge increases in the lopsided margins Democrats now enjoy in both houses of Congress are not expected. McBride admitted to Democratic concern about the chances of four incumbents in particular: Vance Hartke of Indiana, Joseph Montoya of New Mexico, John Tunney of California and Frank Moss of Utah.

Those four "may be in trouble," he said.

But McBride said Democrats aren't prepared to give up on those incumbents, nor are they writing off any of the contests for four vacant Democratic seats and four vacant Republican seats, including the Senate seat Roman Hruska of Nebraska will

Of Nebraska Democratic

Senate nominee Ed Zorinsky, McBride said: "We're going to give him more than our blessings. We'll take a very active interest in the race. I think he'll be a very aggressive candidate.'

The fact that Zorinsky has a very strong Omaha base will help him, McBride said, adding, "He's got a lot of work to do, but it can be done."

McBride believes that the showing by Nebraska Democratic candidates in the last two Senate elections proves that Zorinsky could pull an upset, despite John Y. McCollister's apparent early

"A Democratic governor and the expectation that Carter will run well out there' give Zorinsky an added boost, McBride believes. He likens the Nebraska contest to Connecticut Secretary of State Gloria Shaffer's challenge to Republican Sen. Lowell Weicker: "It's an uphill battle, but the Democrat has a good chance to win.'

Spoken like a cheer-leader, which McBride is.

But it is representative of the optimism which pervaded the convention here. And it must be admitted that the optimism is not entirely unfounded. The startling New York hospitality which I remarked about at the beginning of the convention held up until the end. New Yorkers surprised even themselves. Their mood was consistently upbeat. Most of the people were pleasant and grumbles about poor service or the legendary surliness of Manhattanites were held to a minimum, as were reported incidents of delegatemugging.

Much credit must be given the people who run this city for in-stilling some sort of civic pride and desire to be of service which transcended the city's troubles. And New York's police department was another reason the convention was absorbed into the life of New York as smoothly as a political convention can be absorbed. It is a magnificent department, surely one of the best in the world. New York policemen treat people like people.

New York City is a feast which cannot be eaten all at once. It has to be taken a nibble at a time, with many a visit to the table to appreciate it.

This trip, from the third base seat at Yankee Stadium to the roast wild boar dinner at Maxwell's Plum to visiting St. Patrick's to lengthy crosstown walks was an immensely enjoyable personal experience.

The Democrats must have found it similarly satisfying. Another 52-year lapse between conventions seems out of the

TOM WICKER

Looking Back

NEW YORK — Not long before Ohio cinched the Democratic presidential nomination for Jimmy Carter, a large black man stood up in the North Carolina delegation and held up a hand-painted sign that read: "Robeson County for Carter.

That wasn't funny, unlike another home-made sign above the Virginia delegation that proclaimed: "Teeth Are In." But to an onlooker who was a young reporter on the Lumberton Robesonian in Robeson County, N.C., in 1949, the North Carolina declaration had considerably more significance. Enough has been written about the meaning of a southern white man's being nominated by the Democrats, but the placard in those hands may justify recalling here that in 1949 not only could no such nomination have been made (in 1952, the party crushed the hopes of another Georgian, Richard B. Russell), but there would have been no black delegates from North Carolina - certainly not from Robeson County. In those days, race relations in the county were so stratified that in the Lumberton movie theaters, there were three separate but by no means equal seating sections—whites on the main floor, blacks on one side of the balcony and the Lumbee Indians on the other side, with a chicken wire fence

Carter's vice-presidential nominee clearly appeared to l become the popular choice by the time his name was made public - not only in press speculation but in the cocktail party chatter and the gossip and note-swapping among delegates and alternates on the convention floor.

The reasons seemed primarily to be Walter Mondale's youth - 48 - relatively fresh face and liberal voting record. His selection was seen as complementing Carter's own age - 51 and restoring to the ticket some of the freshness inevitably lost in the long Carter primary campaign. More important, perhaps, in choosing Mondale, the presidential nominee obviously reached out to the liberal wing of the party which has not as yet given Carter its heart.

The way things have been going in presidential politics, when Carter and Mondale appeared before the television cameras Americans may have been seeing the men who will occupy the presidency for the next 16 years.

Recognizing all the things that could slip twixt cup and lip. it's not too far-fetched to assume that if Carter is elected and serves eight years, Mondale - who would be only 56 - might by then have been able to build sufficient support to win the presidential nomination in 1984. Richard Nixon did just that between 1952 and 1960; so did Hubert Humphrey between 1964 and 1968; and so probably would have Spiro T. Agnew, had he not been forced to resign under a cloud. ## Director Confesses 'I Didn't Understand'

By CYNTHIA JOHNSON Star Staff Writer

Director William Kirk had a confession to make following a special young people's performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at Howell Theatre this week.

He told a small cluster of children and parents who stayed for a question and answer session after the play that, when he was younger, he thought he was "too dumb" to understand Shakespeare.

And he felt that way until he began acting in and directing Shakespearean plays.

Even today, there are passages that he doesn't completely understand, he confided.

Judging from the children's response to the play, however, Kirk didn't have to worry about them "understanding" the popular Shakespearean fantasy/comedy.

Their laughter, their appluase, their attentiveness bespoke understanding. Any drama buff would have been heartened to see those children - children of the television age - captivated, entranced by the immediacy and vitality of live theater. "A Midsummer Night's Dream" is one of four plays being presented this summer by the Nebraska Repertory Theatre. The special young people's performance was sponsored by the Golden Masquers, a Repertory Theatre support group.

Few plays could have been better for the purpose. The rock 'em sock 'em antics of the characters - especially the mischievous Puck, the effusive Bottom, and the lovelorn Helena - seemed designed just for children. When the time came for questions, the youngsters — generally in the 9 to 14 age group — unabashedly inquired about such things as "How come everyone (cast members) is barefoot?", and "Do the actors ever get stage fright?"

The answers, respectively: Because it's too expensive to "build shoes" for every cast member, and bare feet help keep them from sliding down the ramps; and "Only on opening night. After that, they're pretty calmed down." At the conclusion of the session, Kirk thanked the children for coming and invited them to "come back and see some more Shakespeare. Given the opportunity, they probably will.

KIRK . . . is not 'too dumb' anymore.

thing as lovely as an audience."

With apologies to Joyce Kilmer, that could be the motto of a new Lincoln theater support group, the Golden Masquers. Organized just five months ago, the Golden Masquers' number one goal, according to chairman Terry Faulkner, is to develop and expand the Nebraska Repertory Theatre's audience.

Not that there's anything wrong with the existing audience.

It's just that Mrs. Faulkner and her fellow Golden Masquers believe that the summer productions offered at Howell Theatre by the repertory company are good enough to merit a greatly expanded audience. One drawn not only from Lincoln, but from the entire state, and, perhaps eventually, a multi-state region.

To that end, Golden Masquers members are involved in a number of projects designed to introduce non-theater-goers "to what the repertory company has to offer," Mrs. Faulkner said.

Established nine years ago, the Nebraska Repertory Theatre is a professional, not student,

"In the case of the "Home Front" preview, members were asked to invite enough friends to fill a row of the theater.

The guests saw the performance free of charge. Afterward, they were invited to meet the play's director and cast at a party. In planning the other three a good way of developing an audience. "We filled the house" for the "Home Front" preview, she continued. And several new people joined Golden Masquers as a summer. Since its inception last February, Golden Masquers has grown to 40 members.

Mrs. Faulkner is hoping for "a good Lincoln core" membership of about 100 by September.

After that, Golden Masquers plans to expand its membership and activities beyond Lincoln. Eventually, members hope to establish "a statewide network" with a Golden Masquers representative in each Nebraska town, Mrs. Faulkner said. These representatives will graduates for the apprenticeship program and will serve as a liason between the repertory theater and their communities.

Looking even further into the future, the Golden Masquers would like to see the Nebraska Repertory Theatre develop into a regional theater with an expanded season of productions.

But at the moment, the fledgling organization is concentrating on one thing: Convincing the people of Lincoln and its environs that, as Mrs. Faulkner puts it, "This is their theater. And if they don't come and see what's happening, they're missing something."

Cline (Sort Of) Races, Too

Star Staff Writer

When the starting board goes down and soap box derby cars roll down R St. Sunday afternoon, part of Ken Cline will be in

He'll roll with the precision wheels, hear the rush of wind past the streamlined bodies and feel the bumps and dips in the Cline isn't a contestant in this year's competition that will send one lucky - and fast - youth to Akron, Ohio, for the national Soap Box Derby Championship.

But in 1967, at age 13, he was not only the best derby racer in Lincoln but the best in the country.

This year Cline, a Burlington Northern employe who lives at 5731 South St., held a clinic for youngsters who wanted to make derby racers. He gave them the benefit of his experience as-a former derby world champ and as a former derby car builder.

The cars have changed a little in the last 10 years, Cline said.

"You have to build a little bit better car

every year to be competitive," he said. Now the riders lie in their cars, their feet stretched to the car's nose. Only their helmeted heads and anxious eyes peak out over a rim of Styrofoam or plastic.

When Cline won the derby, he sat in his car and crouched forward over the steering

Because of some rule changes, the cars aren't really any faster than 10 years ago, Cline said. The weight, width and height limitations were changed to give bigger, heavier kids a chance.

"It used to be a kid any bigger than about 5 feet didn't have much of a chance," Cline said. Now the cars must be at least 14 inches wide, 11 inches high, and can weigh as much as 250 pounds.

Cline said he's seen some strange designs from the kids. One car was held higher off the ground than normal by a structure that resembled stilts. The idea behind the stilts was to remove anything causing wind resistance as the air stream passed under

"It was a good idea," Cline chuckled. "But it didn't run worth a darn."

Most of the cars are streamlined, and their designs appraoch aerodynamic perfection rather than a couple of orange crates on wheels. Oak frames hold fiberglass bodies sanded and painted

"It teaches the kids how to work with all different kinds of tools," Cline said. "But most of all, it teaches them patience."

It takes about eight months to put a derby racer together. And if Cline saw something in one of the cars that wasn't quite right, usually the builder tore it out and started over. Some of the cars will barely be finished in time for Sunday's race sponsored by the Lincoln Jaycees.

Lincoln has pretty good soap box derby competition. Cline said. The winner from here will probably be among the faster cars

Director Confesses 'I Didn't Understand'

Star Staff Writer

Director William Kirk had a confession to make following a special young people's performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at Howell Theatre this week.

He told a small cluster of children and parents who stayed for a question and answer session after the play that, when he was younger, he thought he was "too dumb" to understand

And he felt that way until he began acting in and directing Shakespearean plays.

Even today, there are passages that he doesn't completely understand, he confided.

Judging from the children's response to the play, however, Kirk didn't have to worry about them "understanding" the popular Shakespearean fantasy/comedy.

Their laughter, their appluase, their attentiveness bespoke understanding

Any drama buff would have been heartened to see those children - children of the television age - captivated, entranced by the immediacy and vitality of live theater.

"A Midsummer Night's Dream" is one of four plays being presented this summer by the Nebraska Repertory Theatre. The special young people's performance was sponsored by the Golden Masquers, a Repertory Theatre support group. Few plays could have been better for the purpose.

The rock 'em sock 'em antics of the characters - especially the mischievous Puck, the effusive Bottom, and the lovelorn Helena seemed designed just for children.

When the time came for questions, the youngsters — generally in the 9 to 14 age group - unabashedly inquired about such things as "How come everyone (cast members) is barefoot?", and "Do the actors ever get stage fright?'

The answers, respectively: Because it's too expensive to "build shoes" for every cast member, and bare feet help keep them from sliding down the ramps; and "Only on opening night. After that, they're pretty calmed down.

At the conclusion of the session, Kirk thanked the children for coming and invited them to "come back and see some more

Given the opportunity, they probably will.

Not that there's anything wrong with the existing audience.

It's just that Mrs. Faulkner and her fellow Golden Masquers believe that the summer productions offered at Howell Theatre by the repertory company are good enough to merit a greatly expanded audience. One drawn not only from Lincoln, but from the entire state, and, perhaps eventually, a multi-state region.

To that end, Golden Masquers members are involved in a number of projects designed to introduce non-theater-goers "to what the repertory company has to offer," Mrs. Faulkner said.

Established nine years ago, the Nebraska Repertory Theatre is a professional, not student,

Staging plays during the summer months only, the company's membership is comprised of both local and non-local talent. The cast and production

This summer, the repertory company is presenting four plays

- "Home Front," "A Midsummer Night's Dream, "Loot." and "Born Yesterday"

 in rotating repertory. Prior to each play's opening night performance, Golden Masquers is sponsoring a preview to which members and their guests are invited.

"In the case of the "Home Front" preview, members were asked to invite enough friends to fill a row of the theater.

The guests saw the performance free of charge. Afterward, they were invited to meet the play's director and cast at a party.

In planning the other three previews, Golden Masquers has made arrangements for an audience-participation questionand-answer session with the director following the play. Guests who are invited to the previews, "hopefully will come back," Mrs. Faulkner said. "It's a good way of developing an audience. 'We filled the house" for the "Home Front" preview, she continued. And several new people joined Golden Masquers as a

In addition to the previews, the Golden Masquers sponsored a recent young people's performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream;" and is for two recent high school graduates who are apprentices with the repertory theater this summer Since its inception last February, Golden Masquers has grown to 40 members. Mrs. Faulkner is hoping for "a good Lincoln core" membership of about 100 by September. After that, Golden Masquers plans to expand its membership and activities beyond Lincoln. Eventually, members hope to establish "a statewide network" with a Golden Masquers representative in each Nebraska town, Mrs. Faulkner said. These representatives will help in seeking out high school graduates for the apprenticeship program and will serve as a liason between the repertory theater and their communities

Looking even further into the future, the Golden Masquers would like to see the Nebraska Repertory Theatre develop into a regional theater with an expanded season of productions. But at the moment, the fledgling organization is concentrating on one thing: Convincing the people of Lincoln and its environs that, as Mrs. Faulkner puts it, "This is their theater. And if they don't come and see what's happening, they're missing something.

But in 1967, at age 13, he was not only the best derby racer in Lincoln but the best in This year Cline, a Burlington Northern employe who lives at 5731 South St., held a clinic for youngsters who wanted to make derby racers. He gave them the benefit of his experience as a former derby world champ and as a former derby car builder.

The cars have changed a little in the last 10 years, Cline said.

"You have to build a little bit better car

every year to be competitive," he said. Now the riders lie in their cars, their feet stretched to the car's nose. Only their helmeted heads and anxious eyes peak out over a rim of Styrofoam or plastic.

When Cline won the derby, he sat in his car and crouched forward over the steering

Because of some rule changes, the cars aren't really any faster than 10 years ago, Cline said. The weight, width and height limitations were changed to give bigger, heavier kids a chance.

"It used to be a kid any bigger than about 5 feet didn't have much of a chance," Cline said. Now the cars must be at least 14 inches wide, 11 inches high, and can weigh as much as 250 pounds. Cline said he's seen some strange designs from the kids. One car was held higher off the ground than normal by a structure that resembled stilts. The idea behind the stilts

Most of the cars are streamlined, and their designs appraoch aerodynamic perfection rather than a couple of orange crates on wheels. Oak frames hold fiberglass bodies sanded and painted

"It teaches the kids how to work with all different kinds of tools," Cline said. "But most of all, it teaches them patience.'

It takes about eight months to put a derby racer together. And if Cline saw something in one of the cars that wasn't quite right, usually the builder tore it out and started over. Some of the cars will barely be finished in time for Sunday's race sponsored by the Lincoln Jaycees.

Mobile Home Owners Ask Property Rights Protection

By JANE BRYANT QUINN New York - A bid for economic liberation is gathering steam among the millions of people who rent space in mobile home parks. For years they've been subject to tyrannies gross and petty - by owners of many of the parks. And even where relations are amicable, the structure of the law in most states affords them little protection should problems ever arise.

In several states, legislation has provided mobile home owners with a degree of security - California, Florida, Colorado, Wisconsin and New Jersey being among the states with the better laws. But even there, the battle is far from won. Owner after owner told me, "I just love my mobile home, but there are problems in this park."

In a nutshell, the battle is over conflicting property rights. The park owner owns the land and rents it out. He considers it his right to choose the tenants he wants, write what park rules he will, and evict anyone he considers undesirable.

The person who rents the space, on the other hand, owns the home on it. Unlike an apartment tenant, he cannot easily pick up and move on. He has a major investment in the mobile home — perhaps $10,000 to $20,-000. He also pays for the landscaping on his site, and a driveway.

If evicted, he loses his by for better conditions. landscaping investment, and has to pay to have his home moved. Expensive damage might occur, since the units long ago ceased to be truly mobile. Often there are no other parks in the area which means that he is forced to sell for whatever he can get. One of the pleasures of owning your own home is that if you meet the payments, no one can turn you out. Most owners of mobile homes on rented sites do not have this protection. It is the residents' fear of eviction - and subsequent monetary loss that gives park owners their power. They can write arbitrary rules; force people to deal only with certain high-cost vendors (who pay a percentage back to the park owner); prevent candidates from a particular political party from canvassing on the property; require homeowners to buy oil from the park at a premium price. Some states have made these practices illegal, but they may continue

When people complain, they might be told that if they don't like it they can move (which as a practical matter may be impossible). If they join a tenants' organization to fight the rules, they may be evicted. I don't in any way mean to imply that all parks are this way. But there are enough abuses so that in state after state, mobile home owners organizations are arising to lob-

Some of these groups have been around a long time, like those in Florida and California; others are fairly new. The American Mobilehome Association in Lakewood, Colo., is now trying to weld these state groups into a national organization.

But like labor organizers walking into an anti-union company, tenants' associations meet stiff opposition from park owners. "Residents are terrified that if they join they'll be evicted, even though on paper the state law doesn't allow it."

said an officer of the New Jersey association. I was told in Maryland: "There was a sign on the bulletin board that said membership in the organization was grounds for eviction." I learned in Colorado: "The park owner wouldn't let anyone who joined the association use the clubhouse."

A law requiring park owners to show a just cause before evicting anyone is essential if mobile home owners hope to win any further rights. One of the best laws is Florida's, which allows only four reasons for eviction: (1) nonpayment of rent; (2) conviction of a crime of the type that could endanger other park residents; (3) violation of reasonable park rules (with the emphasis on "reasonable"); and (4) a change in the use of the land (for example, if the park owner wanted to build a shopping center on the site).

But even in Florida the eviction battle is not over. In February, a circuit court judge issued a ruling permitting park owners to evict tenants without cause on 12 months' notice, an action that the Federation of Mobile Home Owners there is challenging in court.

In addition to a good law, a state must provide vigorous enforcement by state attorneys general or, experience has shown, a park owner might not obey.

NEW YORK (AP) - The week's data, which showed a sharp rise in the money supply.

Since the Fed keys its monetary policy to money-supply trends, the figures gave rise to ears that the central bank would drop its recent strategy of easing up on credit and might resume a more restrictive approach.

New York's Citibank, presumably with an eye on the Fed report, announced Friday morning it was holding its prime lending rate unchanged at 71/4 per cent.

With a recent decline in short term interest rates, hopes and been building that the bank, New York City's largest, would lower the basic rate on corp-

Mobile Home Owners Ask Property Rights Protection

By JANE BRYANT QUINN New York - A bid for economic liberation is gathering steam among the millions of people who rent space in mobile home parks. For years they've been subject to tyrannies gross and petty - by owners of many of the parks. And even where relations are amicable, the structure of the law in most states affords them little protection should problems ever arise.

In several states, legislation has provided mobile home owners with a degree of security - California, Florida, Colorado, Wisconsin and New Jersey being among the states with the better laws. But even there, the battle is far from won. Owner after owner told me, "I just love my mobile home, but there are problems in this park." In a nutshell, the battle is over conflicting property rights. The park owner owns the land and rents it out. He considers it his right to choose the tenants he wants, write what park rules he will, and evict anyone he considers undesirable.

The person who rents the space, on the other hand, owns the home on it. Unlike an apartment tenant, he cannot easily pick up and move on. He has a major investment in the mobile home - perhaps $10,000 to $20,-000. He also pays for the landscaping on his site, and a driveway

If evicted, he loses his by for better conditions. landscaping investment, and has to pay to have his home moved. Expensive damage might occur, since the units long ago ceased to those in Florida and California; be truly mobile. Often there are no other parks in the area which means that he is forced to sell for whatever he can get.

your own home is that if you meet the payments, no one can turn you out. Most owners of mobile homes on rented sites do not have this protection. It is the residents' fear of eviction - and subsequent monetary loss that gives park owners their power. They can write arbitrary rules; force people to deal only with certain high-cost vendors (who pay a percentage back to the park owner); prevent candidates from a particular political party from canvassing on the property; require homeowners to buy oil from the park at a premium price. Some states have made these practices illegal, but they may continue

When people complain, they might be told that if they don't like it they can move (which as a practical matter may be impossible). If they join a tenants' organization to fight the rules, they may be evicted. I don't in any way mean to imply that all parks are this way. But there are enough abuses so that in state after state, mobile home owners organizations are arising to lob-anyway.

Some of these groups have been around a long time, like others are fairly new. The American Mobilehome Association in Lakewood, Colo., is now trying to weld these state groups One of the pleasures of owning into a national organization.

But like labor organizers walking into an anti-union company, tenants' associations meet stiff opposition from park owners. "Residents are terrified that if they join they'll be evicted, even though on paper the state law doesn't allow it."

I was told in Maryland: 'There was a sign on the bulletin board that said membership in the organization was grounds for eviction." I learned in Colorado: "The park owner wouldn't let anyone who joined the association use the clubhouse."

said an officer of the New Jersey

A law requiring park owners to show a just cause before evicting anyone is essential if mobile home owners hope to win any further rights. One of the best laws is Florida's, which allows only four reasons for eviction: (1) nonpayment of rent; (2) conviction of a crime of the type that could endanger other park residents; (3) violation of reasonable park rules (with the emphasis on "reasonable"); and (4) a change in the use of the land (for example, if the park owner wanted to build a shopping center on the site). But even in Florida the eviction battle is not over. In February, a circuit court judge issued a ruling permitting park owners to evict tenants without cause on 12 months' notice, an action that the Federation of Mobile Home Owners there is challenging in court.

gon Befogs Court At Rice Trial

By LYNN ZERSCHLING Star Staff Writer

"Blonde Bomber" testified Friday she saw "Blue Rover" make seven or eight passes at "Bear Tracks" before running him down in his '73 Ford pickup truck.

Blonde Bomber turned out to be Rene Swanson, 1333 Garber Ave., who tried to relate in citizens band radio jargon what happened the night her boyfriend, Bear Tracks, was run over by Blue Rover.

Mrs. Swanson, who has short-cropped platinum blonde hair, told the court that she heard Clyde Rice, known as Blue Rover, threaten Donald Edelman, whose CB "handle" was Bear Tracks.

The two men had long running arguments on CB airwaves over control of one of the radio channels, she said.

Her testimony was interrupted numerous times when either the attorneys. court reporter or Lancaster District Judge William Blue asked her to describe some CB radio term or repeat a CB "handle." Judge Can't Interpret

On one occasion, Judge Blue asked Mrs. Swanson to repeat herself. Each time she answered, Judge Blue leaned further over his bench trying to figure out what she said. Finally, he just leaned back in his chair and rolled his eyes toward the ceiling.

On the evening of Saturday, April 10, Rice and Edelman had another squabble over the radio, she said.

Mrs. Swanson said she heard Rice say, "I'm going to do you in." The two men then arranged to meet at the VFW Club parking lot at 38th and Cornhusker Hwy.

Edelman drove his own car to the parking lot, while she drove her car, she said. Edelman cruised around the lot apparently looking for Rice, she testified.

When Rice pulled into the lot, the two men jumped out of their vehicles and started arguing. Mrs. Swanson said she remained in her own car and didn't hear what they were saying.

After exchanging a couple of punches, Rice jumped into his truck, she said, backed up, and then drove toward Edelman, who remained standing in the parking lot.

Rice drove by Edelman. Then, she testified, Rice backed his truck up again, and gunned the truck toward Edelman once again. This occurred about/seven or eight times, she said.

Edelman Run Over

The last time, she said, the front grill of the truck struck Edelman, knocking him over backwards. The front left tire ran over Edelman, she said. Rice kept on driving out of the lot.

On cross-examination, defense attorney Tony Redman asked Mrs. Swanson how many drinks Edelman consumed earlier at the Moose Club. Mrs. Swanson couldn't give a number. She emphatically denied that Edelman was drunk.

Another witness in the case, Police Lt. Lee Wagner, testified that in Rice's statement to the police, Rice contended Edelman was drunk.

Mrs. Swanson also said she didn't see anyone else sitting in the pickup with Rice.

It was about 7 p.m. on April 10 when the incident occured.

But Rice contends that a friend, whose CB "handle" is "Dynamite," was sitting in the truck with him.

Mrs. Swanson, who has a mobile CB unit in her car, said she heard Rice tell another cb-er over the radio that he was at the VFW parking lot.

Punch In Lights "He said he was going to punch this guy's running lights in," she testified.

Redman elicited reluctant testimony from Mrs. Swanson that she owned CB radio equipment, prohibited by the Federal Communications Commission.

She admitted that Rice told her that he had turned her in to the FCC for having illegal equipment.

In his statement to police given late the night of the accident, Rice told Lt. Wagner that Edelman used profane language over the radio and threatened him. Rice claimed that it was Edelman who said he would "punch my running lights out". It was Edelman, Rice claimed in the statement read by Deputy County Attv. Bernie McGinn, who wanted to meet at the parking lot.

Rice claimed in that statement that he yelled at Edelman to get out of the way. He didn't, Rice said, and that's when the accident occurred.

Rice is charged with first degree murder in Edelman's death. Edelman died three days later at a local hospital.

Testimony in the trial will continue Mon-

A $3.5-million shopping center will spring up at 70th and O in Lincoln by the summer of 1977 with the opening then of the largest Safeway store in Nebraska. Robert Weigel, developer of the retail complex he's named Spanish Oaks, said he plans to build the center all at once, rather than in stages.

However, he said the House of the Dragon restaurant, at 6811 O, was the start of the complex when it was built in 1974.

Weigel built Long John Silver's earlier this year and said he plans to add 1,000 square feet

The 78,000-square-foot complex will be built on the sevenacre site at the intersection's southwest corner.

largon Befogs Court At Rice Trial

By LYNN ZERSCHLING Star Staff Writer

"Blonde Bomber" testified Friday she saw "Blue Rover" make seven or eight passes at "Bear Tracks" before running him down in his '73 Ford pickup truck. Blonde Bomber turned out to be Rene Swanson, 1333 Garber Ave., who tried to relate in citizens band radio jargon what happened the night her boyfriend, Bear Tracks, was run over by Blue Rover.

Mrs. Swanson, who has short-cropped platinum blonde hair, told the court that she heard Clyde Rice, known as Blue Rover, threaten Donald Edelman, whose CB "handle" was Bear Tracks.

The two men had long running arguments on CB airwaves over control of one of the radio channels, she said.

Her testimony was interrupted numerous times when either the attorneys, court reporter or Lancaster District Judge William Blue asked her to describe some CB radio term or repeat a CB "handle."

Judge Can't Interpret On one occasion, Judge Blue asked Mrs. Swanson to repeat herself. Each time she answered, Judge Blue leaned further over his bench trying to figure out what she said. Finally, he just leaned back in his chair and rolled his eyes toward the ceiling.

On the evening of Saturday, April 10, Rice and Edelman had another squabble over the radio, she said.

Mrs. Swanson said she heard Rice say, "I'm going to do you in." The two men then arranged to meet at the VFW Club parking lot at 38th and Cornhusker Hwy.

Edelman drove his own car to the parking lot, while she drove her car, she said. Edelman cruised around the lot apparently looking for Rice, she testified.

When Rice pulled into the lot, the two men jumped out of their vehicles and started arguing. Mrs. Swanson said she remained in her own car and didn't hear what they were saying.

After exchanging a couple of punches, Rice jumped into his truck, she said, backed up, and then drove toward Edelman, who remained standing in the parking lot.

Rice drove by Edelman. Then, she testified, Rice backed his truck up again, and gunned the truck toward Edelman once again. This occurred about seven or eight times, she said.

Edelman Run Over

The last time, she said, the front grill of the truck struck Edelman, knocking him over backwards. The front left tire ran over Edelman, she said. Rice kept on driving out of the lot.

On cross-examination, defense attorney Tony Redman asked Mrs. Swanson how many drinks Edelman consumed earlier at the Moose Club. Mrs. Swanson couldn't give a number. She emphatically denied that Edelman was drunk.

Another witness in the case, Police Lt. Lee Wagner, testified that in Rice's statement to the police, Rice contended Edelman was drunk.

Mrs. Swanson also said she didn't see anyone else sitting in the pickup with Rice. It was about 7 p.m. on April 10 when the incident occured But Rice contends that a friend, whose CB "handle" is "Dynamite," was sitting in the truck with him

Mrs. Swanson, who has a mobile CB unit in her car, said she heard Rice tell another cb-er over the radio that he was at the VFW parking lot.

Punch In Lights "He said he was going to punch this guy's running lights in," she testified. Redman elicited reluctant testimony from Mrs. Swanson that she owned CB radio equipment, prohibited by the Federal Communications Commission.

She admitted that Rice told her that he had turned her in to the FCC for having illegal equipment.

In his statement to police given late the night of the accident, Rice told Lt. Wagner that Edelman used profane language over the radio and threatened him.

Rice claimed that it was Edelman who said he would "punch my running lights out". It was Edelman, Rice claimed in the statement read by Deputy County Atty. Bernie McGinn, who wanted to meet at the parking lot.

Rice claimed in that statement that he yelled at Edelman to get out of the way. He didn't, Rice said, and that's when the accident occurred.

Rice is charged with first degree murder in Edelman's death. Edelman died three days later at a local hospital.

Testimony in the trial will continue Mon-

Mahoney Tabbed For G&P Head By TOM VINT THE LINCOLN STAR Outdoor Editor Omaha State Sen. Eugene Mahoney is Despite some controversy, the Nebraska

Game and Parks Commission's board of commissioners Friday night gave six votes of approval with one abstention to Mahoney as new director of the state's conservation agency.

Three names were released from the three-man screening committee to the full seven-man board at Friday night's special meeting. Commission and committee chairman Art Brown of Omaha said Colorado big game manager Richard M. Denney, Lower Elkhorn Natural Resource District head Steve Oltmans of Norfolk and Mahoney were the three finalists.

Less than 30 minutes after the 7:30 p.m. meeting was opened by Brown, Mahoney had been named as the top choice. Only Ravenna commissioner Bud Campbell abstained from the voting for lack of information on the candidates.

Roca commissioner Dick Nisley, a member of the screening committee, moved to accept Mahoney's application. Ken Zimmerman of Loup City seconded the motion.

"In my opinion, all three of these men meet the requirements of the position as far as the law is concerned," said North Platte commissioner Tod Kuntzelman, also a member of the screening committee. "So did a number of applicants but Mahoney was selected for a number of reasons."

Kuntzelman pointed out the powerful Omaha legislator had a special ability to get Sports

"As far as technical data, he can surround himself with all the technical people he wants to right here," Kuntzelman said in answer to the controversy surrounding specualtion of Mahoney's appointment.

Critics called for a professional resource manager for the position but the commissioners opted for an administrative man they feel will help the commission gain inroads into Legislative funding and rule making.

"I'm sure he is qualified as an administrator under the statutes," said Nisley, who claims to have known Mahonev for over 20 years. "This man is needed for two reasons. This agency has suffered through the years in budgetary ability in securing funding and it also needed a better liaison on the federal level for funding. All of this is important to an Nisley felt Mahoney's role as chairman of the Legislative Executive Board and his role on federal agencies as a state senator have helped him qualify for administrative duties and would enable him to get funding for the agency.

"I've known Gene for quite some time and I don't know of a man who knows the state better than he does," said Chadron commissioner Bill Lindeken, adding his

"I think he knows all the parks and has gone down most of the rivers," said Brown. This job is as a secretary, actually an executive secretary, and I feel he's qualified."

Zimmerman said he realized Mahoney didn't have some of the characteristics desired as a resource manager in being named director but added, "I don't think a man has to have all these characteristics to serve as a director of this commission."

Zimmerman said all Mahoney has to do is work closely with his staff to secure the knowledge of the position in making policy in the resource management area. "If Mr. Mahoney works with all the people on the commission, I think he can get the job done," said Zimmerman. Norfolk commissioner Don Bridge seconded that comment. The post recommendation was for an annual salary of $27,500 with annual cost of living raises and expenses. The term of the appointment will expire April 22, 1982. Mahoney, who was reached earlier in the week at the Democratic National Convention in New York, said he would accept the post if offered to him and carried an annual salary in the $25,000 to $30,000 range. He is due back in the state sometime next week.

Should Mahoney accept the directorship, he is required by law to resign his political Omaha State Sen. Eugene Mahoney is the man.

Despite some controversy, the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission's board of commissioners Friday night gave six votes of approval with one abstention to Mahoney as new director of the state's conservation agency.

Three names were released from the three-man screening committee to the full seven-man board at Friday night's special meeting. Commission and committee chairman Art Brown of Omaha said Colorado big game manager Richard M. Denney, Lower Elkhorn Natural Resource District head Steve Oltmans of Norfolk and Mahoney were the three finalists.

Less than 30 minutes after the 7:30 p.m. meeting was opened by Brown, Mahoney had been named as the top choice. Only Ravenna commissioner Bud Campbell abstained from the voting for lack of information on the candidates

Roca commissioner Dick Nisley, a member of the screening committee, moved to accept Mahoney's application. Ken Zimmerman of Loup City seconded

"In my opinion, all three of these men meet the requirements of the position as far as the law is concerned," said North Platte commissioner Tod Kuntzelman, also a member of the screening committee. "So did a number of applicants but Mahoney was selected for a number of reasons.

"As far as technical data, he can surround himself with all the technical people he wants to right here," Kuntzelman said in answer to the controversy surrounding specualtion of Mahoney's appointment.

Critics called for a professional resource manager for the position but the commissioners opted for an administrative man they feel will help the commission gain inroads into Legislative funding and rule making

"I'm sure he is qualified as an administrator under the statutes," said Nisley, who claims to have known Mahoney for over 20 years. "This man is needed for two reasons. This agency has suffered through the years in budgetary ability in securing funding and it also needed a better liaison on the federal level for funding. All of this is important to an

Williams Inks Pact

The Cleveland Cavaliers signed their top draft choice, guard Chuckie Williams of Kansas State University, who determined the final detail of his contract by the baskets he made during the announcement.

Williams became the seventh consecutive first round choice signed for the Cavs by coach-general manager Bill Fitch. The Cavs made the event somewhat different by having Williams shoot for a better contract on the pratice floor. Fitch and Williams' agent: couldn't quite agree on several points although they were close. So Williams shot 10 baskets from 18 feet, with the number he made determining the final figures.

Williams made eight of the shots, including one over the head of the 8-2 Fitch while Fitch stood on a chair.

Other Basketball

The Optimist Club in Bessemer City, N.C., has dropped its sponsorship of basketball for youngsters. It says it couldn't teach them good sportsmanship while parents were such bad sports by harassing referees.

Olympics

Lightweight boxer Howard Davis decided to remain in the Olympic Village after learning Friday morning his mother died in her New York home the previous evening. Davis was asked if he wanted to return home, but at the suggestion of his father, Davis will remain at the Olympics site and compete.

The Games of the XXIst Olympiad may be costing Canadian agencies more than any Games in history, but there are fewer athletes in Montreal (7,300) than there were in Munich in 1972

Australia's equestrian team, after training its horses for four years, will have to sell the horses after the Olympics. Australian laws makes importation of animals so difficult that it is easier to sell the horses. "We have a very low rate of anthrax and almost no rabies in our country," one spokesman said, "and we intend to keep it that way."

Football

The Kansas City Chiefs got a recruit for their thinning ranks at linebacker with the delayed signing of Oklahoma's Jimbo Elrod.

Wayward quarterback Joe Gilliam was lopped off the New Orleans Saints' roster by coach Hank Stram, who decided he was no bargain after all. "We can't help people who will not help themselves," Stram said. Stram said Gilliam would not abide by

Fears that the Baltimore Colts may abandon the city have apparently evaporated with the proposal of a Memorial Stadium lease agreement giving the football clib a financial windfall. Under the agreement, the Colts would be assessed the same dollar amount as the baseball Orioles, whose contract is pegged to attendance and the club paid $53,000 in rent. Defensive lineman Tom Keating, ordered reinstated to the Pittsburgh Steelers roster, has been barred from the club's training camp after failing to report on schedule. Keating was reinstated after a national Labor Board said he was discriminated against when he helped the players' union with the 1974 players' strike.

Running back Mike Adamle has left the Chicago Bears training camp "for personal reasons," the team announced. Coach Jack Pardee will retain him on the roster should be decide to return. Linebacker Al Atkinson, the last defensive member of the New York Jets' 1969 Super Bowl team, retired and wide receiver Eddie Bell was placed on waivers by the team.

Other Sports

Judy Rankin, whose hotel room was burglarized Thursday night, stole the show in the opening round of the $70,000 Borden Classic, shooting four-under-par 68 Friday for a one shot lead in the Ohio LPGA Classic. Saily Little, Roberta Albers and newly crowned U.S. Open champion Joeanne Carner remained tied for second with 69s.

Tuesday night's baseball Ali-Star Game was watched by a record 60 million persons and took a 53 per cent share of the television audience that night.

Williams Inks Pact Philadelp Pittsburgh New Yor St. Louis Chicago Montreal

The Cleveland Cavaliers signed their top draft choice, guard Chuckie Williams of Kansas State University, who determined the final detail of his contract by the baskets he made during the an-

Williams became the seventh consecutive first round choice signed for the Cavs by coach-general manager Bill Fitch. The Cavs made the event somewhat different by having Williams shoot for a better contract on the pratice floor. Fitch and Williams' agent couldn't quite agree on several points although they were close. So Williams shot 10 baskets from 18 feet, with the number he made determining the final figures.

Williams made eight of the shots, including one over the head of the 6-2 Fitch while Fitch stood on a chair.

Other Basketball

The Optimist Club in Bessemer City, N.C., has dropped its sponsorship of basketball for youngsters. It says it couldn't teach them good sportsmanship while parents were such bad sports by harassing referees.

Olympics

Lightweight boxer Howard Davis decided to remain in the Olympic Village after learning Friday morning his mother died in her New York home the previous evening. Davis was asked if he wanted to return home, but at the suggestion of his father, Davis will remain at the Olympics site and compete.

The Games of the XXIst Olympiad may be costing Canadian agencies more than any Games in history, but there are fewer athletes in Montreal (7,300) than there were in Munich in 1972 (8.000)

Australia's equestrian team, after training its horses for four years, will have to sell the horses after the Olympics. Australian laws makes importation of animals so difficult that it is easier to sell the horses. "We have a very low rate of anthrax and almost no rabies in our country," one spokesman said, "and we intend to keep it that way.'

Football

The Kansas City Chiefs got a recruit for their thinning ranks at linebacker with the delayed signing of Oklahoma's Jimbo Elrod. Wayward quarterback Joe Gilliam was lopped off the New Orleans Saints' roster by coach Hank Stram, who decided he was no bargain after all. "We can't help people who will not help themselves," Stram said. Stram said Gilliam would not abide by

Fears that the Baltimore Colts may abandon the city have apparently evaporated with the proposal of a Memorial Stadium lease agreement giving the football club a financial windfall. Under the agreement, the Colts would be assessed the same dollar amount as the baseball Orioles, whose contract is pegged to attendance and the club paid $53,000 in rent.

Defensive lineman Tom Keating, ordered reinstated to the Pittsburgh Steelers roster, has been barred from the club's training camp after failing to report on schedule. Keating was reinstated after a national Labor Board said he was discriminated against when he helped the players' union with the 1974 players' strike.

Running back Mike Adamle has left the Chicago Bears training camp "for personal reasons," the team announced. Coach Jack Pardee will retain him on the roster should be decide to return. Linebacker Al Atkinson, the last defensive member of the New York Jets' 1969 Super Bowl team, retired and wide receiver Eddie

Women Bowlers Increase Skills

Journal Sports Staff

It hasn't been all that long ago when women were just plain not wanted in bowling alleys

It's been even less time ago when women were required to wear dresses to bowl in classic leagues and tournaments And yet, in terms of parity of numbers women bowlers today are even with the

But women's skills at that game have not grown as fast as their interest, leading many bowling experts to believe there is an inherent reason why women can't become good bowlers

But a trio of local bowling experts — Jim Dill, Rodger Florom and Max Jensen, feel women bowlers have as much potential to become good bowlers as men

"You look at those pro women bowlers and they are good," says Dill "In fact, good women pro bowlers actually have better technical skills at the game than

The reason, according to Dill, is that most women do not have the strength to overcome timing errors. Consequently, to become good bowlers they must have good

Well, what is a good bowler? "Those who relate a high score to bowling well are wrong," says Dill "I think the factors which make a good bowler are maintaining rotation on the bowling ball and accuracy on varying conditions

The trio feels there are several factors which hold women bowlers back "Many women, because of home and family responsibilities are unwilling to take the time to practice," says Dill "Also, many women have mental problems to As an example of the type of mental problem Dill is referring to, he cites the fact many women don't bend their knees

"When I went to the National Bowling Council clinic in Omaha last fall, Vesma Grinfelds (one of the top women pros) said the reason women don't bend their knees is simply because they're afraid to let their rear end show Too many times women are more worried about appearance than performance

Many women also feel that lack of size and strength hurts their chances

"Lack of size is no excuse," says Dill. "In fact many women are hurt by using a 10pound ball when they could be using a heavier ball Women pro bowlers throw 16 pound bowling balls — and they throw them well"

Another misconception according to the trio is that women throw backup balls because a women's elbow joint is constructed different than men's

"There's no truth to that," says Dill "The reason you throw a backup ball is because you rush the line and don't bend your knee This forces your arm into an inside-out motion, which causes the backup

"Actually, women, because of their natural gracefulness, should find bowling easier than men," says Dill "There's no reason why a woman can't become a good bowler with practice '

Graham Leads By Four Strokes

turned the plush course into a quagmire, Australia's David Graham splashed his way to a three-under-par 68 Friday and took a four-stroke lead at the halfway mark of the $300,000 Westchester Golf Classic

Graham, who had a 63 Thursday to share the firstround lead with Carlton White, posted five burdles on the front nine before the rain started and then survived three straight bogies on the back side to finish with a 36-hole total of 11-under-

That gave the 30-year-old Aussie a four-stroke lead over White, Mike Wynn and Larry Ziegler and a five-shot advantage over Arnold Palmer, Tom Watson and Andy North

Wynn, who says he will give up the tour this year unless he can break even financially, carded a par 71 to go with an opening round 64, while Ziegler came in with a 67 after posting a 68 Thursday

White, whose 63 in the opening round was the lowest competitive total of his life, got caught in the rain and struggled to a one-over-par 72

Those who teed off in the mor-Fighting off a steady rain that ning managed to complete their rounds before the rain began, and among that group were Palmer and North, both of whom carded 67s for two-round totals of 136 It was the first time Palmer had put together two successive rounds

Women Bowlers Increase Skills

By BOB MOYER Journal Sports Staff

It hasn't been all that long ago when women were just plain not wanted in bowling alleys.

It's been even less time ago when women were required to wear dresses to bowl in classic leagues and tournaments.

And yet, in terms of parity of numbers women bowlers today are even with the

But women's skills at that game have not grown as fast as their interest, leading many bowling experts to believe there is an inherent reason why women can't become

But a trio of local bowling experts — Jim Dill, Rodger Florom and Max Jensen, feel women bowlers have as much potential to become good bowlers as men.

"You look at those pro women bowlers and they are good," says Dill. "In fact, good women pro bowlers actually have better technical skills at the game than

The reason, according to Dill, is that most women do not have the strength to overcome timing errors. Consequently, to become good bowlers they must have good

Well, what is a good bowler? "Those who relate a high score to bowling well are wrong," says Dill. "I think the factors which make a good bowler are maintaining rotation on the bowling ball and accuracy on varying conditions.

The trio feels there are several factors which hold women bowlers back.

"Many women, because of home and family responsibilities are unwilling to take the time to practice," says Dill. "Also, many women have mental problems to

As an example of the type of mental problem Dill is referring to, he cites the fact many women don't bend their knees

"When I went to the National Bowling Council clinic in Omaha last fall, Vesma Grinfelds (one of the top women pros) said the reason women don't bend their knees is simply because they're afraid to let their rear end show. Too many times women are more worried about appearance than performance.

Many women also feel that lack of size and strength hurts their chances.

"Lack of size is no excuse," says Dill. "In fact many women are hurt by using a 10pound ball when they could be using a heavier ball. Women pro bowlers throw 16 pound bowling balls - and they throw them well."

Another misconception according to the trio is that women throw backup balls because a women's elbow joint is constructed different than men's.

"There's no truth to that," says Dill. "The reason you throw a backup ball is because you rush the line and don't bend your knee. This forces your arm into an inside-out motion, which causes the backup

"Actually, women, because of their natural gracefulness, should find bowling easier than men," says Dill. "There's no reason why a woman can't become a good bowler with practice.'

Graham Leads By Four Strokes

HARRISON, N. Y. (UPI) -Fighting off a steady rain that ning managed to complete their turned the plush course into a rounds before the rain began, quagmire, Australia's David and among that group were Graham splashed his way to a Palmer and North, both of three-under-par 68 Friday and took a four-stroke lead at the halfway mark of the $300,000 Westchester Golf Classic.

Graham, who had a 63 Thursday to share the first- Open in July of last year. round lead with Carlton White, posted five birdies on the front nine before the rain started and Larry Ziegler Andy North then survived three straight bogies on the back side to finish with a 36-hole total of 11-underpar 131.

That gave the 30-year-old Aussie a four-stroke lead over White, Mike Wynn and Larry Ziegler and a five-shot advantage over Arnold Palmer, Tom Watson and Andy North. Wynn, who says he will give up the tour this year unless he can break even financially, carded a par 71 to go with an opening round 64, while Ziegler came in with a 67 after posting a 68 Thursday.

White, whose 63 in the opening round was the lowest competitive total of his life, got caught in tthe rain and struggled to a one-over-par 72.

whom carded 67s for two-round totals of 136. It was the first time Palmer had put together two successive rounds under 70 since the Canadian

Meet Star Carrier Douglas Tyler Assuming responsibility and learning how to meet people are some of the most important benefits of managing a paper route, says Douglas Tyler of Lincoin. A carrier salesman for The Lincoln Star for two and a half years, Doug's excellent service has produced steady business growth, evoked numerous compliments from customers and earned him the Senior Carrier award.

A member of the Ashland Country Club, Doug has used part of his route profits to buy a set of golf clubs and is saving the rest of it for the future.

The East High School student plans to attend technical school after his graduation.

Pauline Anderson, 1st District concremional candidate, told a Diller audience Friday that Nebraska will need a "close link" with what she predicted will be the new administration of former Gov. Jimmy Carter and Sen. Walter Mondale. That link should be provided by a Democratic representative, she said.

Anderson praised Democratic convention delegates for nominating the "perfect team." Mondale and Carter received the party's nomination because "the normally 'ailent majority' has spoken," she said.

chologists maintain that when people say, "How are you?" or 'How do you feel?" they are not really asking you in the expectation of getting a reply. Those who use this form of greeting, in truth, become uncomfortable if you tell them how you do feel. You're just supposed to say, "Fine" or "Okay" and then go on your way or get for years. Long ago I remember Grantland Rice, the late, famous on with the conversation. Peculiar, isn't it, that quite a few of our greetings to one another are meaningless and just designed to avoid intimacy by have three different friends who learning how to meet people are some of the most important benefits of managing a paper route, says Douglas Tyler of Lincoln.

A carrier salesman for The Lincoln Star for two and a half years, Doug's excellent service has produced steady business growth, evoked numerous compliments from customers and earned him the Senior Carrier A member of the Ashland

Country Club, Doug has used part of his route profits to buy a set of golf clubs and is saving the rest of it for the future.

The East High School student plans to attend technical school after his graduation.

Leo who likes astrology: Mike Douglas. Scorpio who looks like her sign: Katharine Hepburn. Taurus who looks like his sign: Willie Mays. Aries who exemplified his sign: Harry Houdini.

sign: Harry Houdini.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Diversity.
Insist on leaving yourself options. One who wants "ironclad" agreement may have ulterior motive. Know it and protect your interests. Gemini, Libra and Sagittarius could be in picture. Social lite heightened. You make favorable impression at "gathering."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Restrictions, delays should not be blown up out of proportion. Avoid co-signing, giving impression that you approve when, in reality, you have not decided. You're due for some frank, truthful answers to queries. What seems a setback is merely a post-ponement.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Some desires are revised. Member of opposite sex shows another side — you may change your mind concerning "romantic situation." Another Gemin!— and a Virgo — play key roles. Your image undergoes transformation. You're more intriguing — and could be subject of controversy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on home, domestic area, family. Your standing, aspirations, ambitions are spotlighted. Taurus, Libra and Scorpio figure prominently. Discussion of general course, goal could command aftention within family circle.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your viewpoint has yet to coalesce; give yourself time to focus on priorities. Strive to see as is, not through rose-colored glasses. Specifically, you get messages from a distance, you're asked to decide about policy and travel. Pisces, Cancer and Scorpio could be involved.
